Honouring Pets through Community Legacy at Vet HQ

At Vet HQ, we've always believed that caring for animals means caring for the community around them. Our pets bring people together, in parks, on neighbourhood walks, at puppy school, and in the quiet moments shared at home. When a cherished companion passes away, that loss is felt not just by one family, but by the wider community that watched that pet grow, play, and connect with others.

To honour these special lives, Vet HQ has partnered with Trees for Pets Australia to plant a memorial tree for every pet remembered through our clinics. It's a gesture that reflects the way our community supports one another, rooted in kindness, growing into something meaningful.

Each memorial arranged through Vet HQ contributes to two important causes:

- A tree is planted in honour of the pet, adding to green spaces and helping restore habitats
- A donation is made to the Australian Companion Animal Health Foundation (ACAHF), supporting research that benefits pets and families across Australia

This means every tribute becomes part of something bigger, a healthier environment, stronger veterinary knowledge, and a community connected through shared care.

We hope that for families, knowing a tree is growing in their pet's name brings comfort during a difficult time and is a reminder that their pet's story continues, not just in memory, but in a living, growing part of the world we all share.

Through our partnership with Trees for Pets Australia and our support of ACAHF, we're proud to help create something lasting: a greener world, stronger veterinary research, and a meaningful way for families to honour the pets who touched their lives.

For more information on Trees for Pets and ACAHF you can visit their websites

https://treesforpets.com.au and https://acahf.org

Author: Katherine Atkinson – General Manager